Subordinating Conjunctions

after although if as because before until unless when while

Can you spot the main clause and the subordinate clause in the sentences below?

Remember, the main clause makes sense on its own and the dependent clause doesn't; it begins with a subordinating conjunction.

Underline the main clause, find the subordinating conjunction and circle the independent clause.

- 1) We should stop using petrol cars because they damage the environment.
- 2) Humans should stop their selfish actions before it is too late.
- 3) Although we know the dangers, we continue to use fossil fuels.
- 4) Although we know what we are facing, we still fail to act to stop climate change.

If the dependent clause is at the beginning of a sentence, it is separated by a comma.

Now write your own complex sentences about climate change using the subordinating conjunctions.
